Editorial Review for Straits – by Jonathan Baker

In Short

Looming over Juniper like an old-Hollywood Frank Lloyd Wright house, Straits' hardwood ceilings and origami-shaped lamps accent an angular design that pops with detail. Inside is a dark and chic scene; two stories every bit of as cool as the Grammy-winner behind its inception. More Pan-Asian than Singaporean, authenticity is delicately sprinkled into the mainstream menu. Kung Pao lollipops are bone-in and sopping with a dark gingery-plum glaze and the Ikan Pangang (salmon) is soft and sauced, wrapped eloquently in a banana leaf. It's a menu and setting that a gourmand will like, and suburban friends will gush over.

Insider Tips

Know Before You Go

The menu is designed to share, and with entrees starting at $11, it's possible to enjoy a fancy meal without killing your wallet.

Where to Sit

While the second story wraps itself around the restaurant, head downstairs by the massive window for a little more space and a clear view.

What to Drink

Hands down the best deal in Midtown, Tiger beer is $1.50 every day.

Parking

Valet costs you $3, but on weeknights you can find off-street parking close by.
